In the 1920s the battle for the soul of America was being fought in the classroom. Anti-biblical “modernism” threatened to unravel the fabric of belief and destroy the faith handed down by the saints. “Apostate” schools were everywhere and self-proclaimed Fundamentalists had nowhere to send their young without exposing them to heretical teaching. T.T. Shields heard the cry of those forlorn parents and threw his hat into that ring. However, the fate of the fundamentalist university he started would become a thing of legend...

James Robertson is the Senior Pastor of Mountsberg & Westover Baptist Churches and a second-year Doctoral Student at McMaster Divinity College in the Department of Christian History. His research areas include Churches & War, and Church & Culture issues. Born and raised in B.C. and Alberta, James and his wife, Melissa, moved to Ontario six years ago. They now live in a beautiful farmhouse in Campbellville with their adorable two-year-old son, Silas, their timid dog, Sawyer, and their fairly vicious cat, Fiona.
